One way that white women can start to make a difference is by having hard conversations about race. These conversations can be uncomfortable, but they are essential for creating understanding and building a more just world.

However, many white women avoid having these conversations because they fear being seen as racist or because they don't know what to say. This book will help white women overcome their fear of having hard conversations and start accepting their role in creating a more just and equitable world.

What You'll Learn in This Book

- Why it's important for white women to have hard conversations about race
- How to overcome your fear of having these conversations
- What to say and do in challenging situations
- How to create a more just and equitable world for all
