

Mugged In Frankfurt By Fake Police: A True Story of Survival and Recovery

By Denise Frame

In 2018, I was mugged in Frankfurt, Germany, by fake police officers. I was on a business trip and had just arrived at the airport when I was approached by two men in police uniforms. They asked to see my passport and then told me that I was carrying too much cash. They said that they needed to take me to the police station to question me.

I was scared and confused, but I went with them. They took me to a car and drove me to a secluded area. They then got out of the car and forced me to hand over my money. I refused, and they began to beat me. They punched me in the face and stomach, and kicked me in the legs. They also threatened to kill me if I didn't give them my money.

I was terrified, and I finally gave them my money. They then let me go, and I ran to the nearest police station. The real police were very helpful, and they helped me to file a report. They also gave me a ride back to my hotel.

I was badly shaken by the experience, but I am grateful that I survived. I am also grateful for the help that I received from the real police. I am now sharing my story in the hope that it will help others to avoid being mugged by fake police officers.

Here are some tips to help you avoid being mugged by fake police officers:

- Be aware of your surroundings and be suspicious of anyone who approaches you.
- Never hand over your money or valuables to anyone who you do not know and trust.
- If you are approached by someone who claims to be a police officer, ask to see their identification.
- If you are not sure whether or not someone is a real police officer, call the police.

If you are mugged, try to stay calm and do not resist. The most important thing is to get to safety. Once you are safe, report the crime to the police.

I hope that my story will help others to stay safe.
