Corruption undermines good governance, distorts justice, and erodes the rule of law. It fuels human rights abuses, fuels terrorism, and weakens the fabric of society. By stealing from the public purse, grand corruption deprives governments of the resources needed to invest in healthcare, education, and infrastructure, exacerbating poverty and inequality.

In response to the devastating effects of grand corruption, the United Nations adopted the United Nations Convention against Corruption (UNCAC) in 2003. UNCAC serves as a global framework for international cooperation in combating corruption. It establishes a comprehensive set of obligations for state parties to prevent, investigate, prosecute, and punish corruption offenses.

UNCAC also includes provisions for international cooperation in the recovery of stolen assets, mutual legal assistance, and technical assistance to support developing countries in their anti-corruption efforts. The convention has been ratified by over 180 countries, demonstrating the global commitment to fighting grand corruption.
